Programs Overview

The China University of Political Science and Law (CUPL) is a “Project 211” university—a government honor bestowed upon China’s finest institutions of higher education. CUPL is well known for legal academics and also enjoys a distinguished reputation in arts, history, philosophy, economics, management, and education. Under the supervision of the State Ministry of Education (MOE), CUPL is located in Beijing on two campuses: the Xueyuan Lu campus in Haidian District and the Fuxue Lu campus in Changping District.

There are altogether 20 departments under the university and over 15374 students with a teaching staff of more than 900 members, including 248 professors/associate professors, 167 doctorate tutors and 602 master tutors.

CUPL comprises 19 schools and departments and 15 university-level research institutes. CUPL currently offers 18 majors for undergraduates, 68 academic master degree programs, 3 professional master degree programs, 27 doctoral programs, and 2 post-doctoral research centers.

Our University always attaches importance to domestic and international communication and has established international cooperation with 161 distinguished universities and institutions in 39 countries.

Due to the unprecedented process of globalization, knowledge of Chinese law is becoming a necessary instrument for those who have business, cultural, academic and political encounters with China. CUPL, one of the most highly rated academic legal institutions in China, understands the difficulties for many foreign students and legal professionals to study Chinese law in Chinese language, as well as those students and professionals’ desire to acquire a basic knowledge of Chinese law. Accordingly our institution offers English-taught LLM and PhD programs in Chinese law. The programs were formally launched in September 2006 and students can join the programs twice a year in the Fall Semester or Spring Semester respectively. Presently, the programs are offered and managed by the Faculty of International Law, CUPL.

The Master of Law Program (LL.M. Program) in Comparative Law with a Chinese Law at CUPL, Beijing, China is one of the first formal legal educational programs at the graduate level in China that is specially designed for international students. This LL.M. Program does not only provide all courses and materials in English, but also provides the unique opportunity to get inside views of the Chinese legal system and the society through close contacts with Chinese students, legal professionals and common people. Presently, this program is offered and managed by School of International Studies, CUPL.

The relevant information on the Programs is set out below.

1. Master of International Law

The LL.M program includes three specific research fields, i.e. LL.M in Chinese and Comparative Law, LL.M in International Law. Students are able to pursue their interests in either commercial law or general comparative law by choosing different courses offered within the program.

The purpose of the program is to provide advanced and practical knowledge of Chinese law to students & practitioners across the world, who feels more comfortable with using English as a medium of study. Promoting further, wider legal exchange and co-operation between CUPL and foreign students or practitioners is also one of the major concerns of the program.

Admission Requirements

The program is open only to foreign nationals. Anyone with a formal undergraduate degree as recognized by the Ministry of Education of China is welcome to apply for admission. An undergraduate degree in law is, however, an advantage.

Period of Study

The program is normally for two years. Please see next section on the courses offered and credits awarded to each course for detail.

The staff of the Overseas Development Office, Faculty of International Law, will provide advice to each candidate on how to organize his or her study plan.

Dissertation and Supervision

A LL.M candidate must submit a dissertation of about 30,000 words in length to fulfill the requirements for the LL.M degree. Only those candidates who have acquired minimum credits for graduation and defended their LL.M dissertations successfully in front of an examination panel of three members are eligible for the award of LL.M in International Law. A LL.M candidate will be assigned a supervisor during the course of his/her study who is responsible for guiding the candidate's researches and dissertations.

Cost of Study

The total cost of the LLM is RMB87,000, covering the minimum courses (or equivalents) for 26 credits and a LLM dissertation.

2. PhD of International Law

The program is formally known as PhD in International Law, majoring in International and Comparative Law. The program welcomes research proposals in a wide range of research areas, such as international law, comparative law, commercial law, human rights law, maritime law, law of WTO, law of the seas, international environmental law.

The purpose of the program is to provide advanced academic trainings to candidates who feel more comfortable in using English as a medium of study. Promoting advanced and high leveled legal exchange and co-operation between CUPL and foreign students and academics is also one of the major concerns of the program.

Admission Requirements

The program is open only to foreign nationals. The applicant must possess a formal master degree recognized by the Ministry of Education of China, and demonstrate an ability to pursue independent academic research in the area of study as proposed by him/her. Due consideration will be given to the relevance between the applicant's educational backgrounds and working experiences on one hand, and the proposed research area on the other.

Period of Study

A PhD degree normally takes about three years to complete. An extension of time may be available upon the request by the relevant candidate, and the maximum period of study is six years from the date of admission. In case of extension, an extension fee as determined by the program shall apply.

Curriculum and Credits Awarded

A PhD candidate must obtain a minimum of 16 credits to fulfill the requirements for the award of the PhD degree. A candidate may obtain credits by attending designated courses and writing research papers as directed by his/her supervisor. The courses offered to PhD students are set out as follows:

Courses Arrangement

NO.	Course Name	Credits	Credit Hours

Additionally, a PhD student may follow one special course as designated or offered by supervisor. Each course may carry 2-3 credits depending on actual contact hours (36 or 54 contact hours).

A PhD candidate is required to take one compulsory course: Introduction to Chinese Law. In addition, the supervisor of a PhD candidate shall direct the candidate to take any of the courses offered within the LL.M program as she/he deems necessary for the completion of the proposed PhD research. The supervisor may also decide to offer a special course relating to the area of research as proposed by the candidate. Each PhD candidate must submit at least two study reports and two annual research papers during the term of his/her candidacy. Each of such report or paper is worth 1 credit. A candidate must obtain a minimum of 16 credits by attending taught courses and writing study reports and annual research papers to be qualified for the submission of his/her PhD dissertation.

Dissertation and Supervision

A PhD candidate must submit a dissertation of about 100,000 words in length to fulfill the requirements for the award of the PhD degree. A supervisory panel consisting of 3 academic members of the Faculty of International Law, CUPL will be appointed for each PhD candidate during the first academic year of his/her candidacy. An outside member may be invited to join the supervisory panel as the Dean of the Faculty of International Law deems necessary. A candidate must have obtained the minimum 16 credits for graduation and defended his/her dissertation successfully in front a panel of five members before the PhD degree can be awarded.

Cost of Study
